The role

The post is for a Research Associate in the Design Bioethics Lab, located within the Neuroscience, Ethics and Society (NEUROSEC) Team in the Department of Psychiatry.

The NEUROSEC Team has an international reputation for its work in neuroscience ethics and psychiatric ethics and is uniquely situated within Oxford Psychiatry and Neuroscience, building collaborative research relationships with scientists, clinicians and public stakeholders, whilst maintaining a critical perspective and a portfolio of independent research projects.

For more information please see here.

The postholder will be joining an exciting research sub-group within the NEUROSEC team, working in the Design Bioethics Lab (DBL) led by Professor Ilina Singh. The DBL is based on a novel framework intended to support theoretical rigour and systematic, scalable research in empirical bioethics (see publication), created as part of Prof

Singh's previous Wellcome Trust senior investigator project. Our current projects in the DBL are focused on developing a set of digital and dialogical tools to enable identification and investigation of value disagreements around the question: What do we owe future generations? Within this, we are particularly interested in issues related to climate change and/or environmental ethics. As with most of the work in the NEUROSEC Team, our DBL projects are focused on young people and will be co-designed with members of the NeurOX Young People's Advisory Group.

Funding Sources for the Post

Funding for the advertised role stems from a Wellcome Trust Discovery Research Platform grant for a project called ANTITHESES: A Platform for Transformative Inclusivity in Ethics and Humanities Research. Antitheses addresses an urgent need for research that can engage meaningfully with the radical value disagreements, polarisation, and informational uncertainty characteristic of contemporary medical science, practice, and policy. Antitheses will develop new tools and methods to address such challenges, across the fields of history, philosophy, the fine arts, design bioethics, sociology, and global bioethics.

Responsibilities

- Manage own research and administrative activities, within guidelines provided by senior colleagues
- Contribute to wider project planning and organisation, including ideas for new research projects
- Select, follow, and adapt specialist methodologies to confirm or refute theories, and identify suitable alternatives where information or research material is restricted
- Contribute to the design of research protocols
- Gather, analyse, and present data from a variety of sources, including Al-supported platforms
- Undertake comprehensive and systematic literature reviews and write up the results for publication in peerreviewed journals or for presentation at conferences or public meetings
- Contribute to research publications, book chapters and reviews
- Contribute to administrative tasks; including project management; meeting and event planning and minuting; ethics applications; website maintenance; digital folders.
- Contribute to discussions and share research findings with colleagues in partner institutions, and the broader ANTITHESES group.

Selection criteria

Essential selection criteria

- Undergraduate degree in psychology, geography, bioethics or a relevant empirical social science discipline
- Experience of major contributions to, or leading successful execution of an empirical research project(s) in a relevant area of study
- Demonstrated skills in the use of systematic approaches to literature reviewing across relevant disciplinary databases, including those outside the candidate's primary discipline
- Ability to use (with understanding of limitations) current and emerging AI-platforms to facilitate rapid and comprehensive reviewing
- Demonstrated ability to work independently following support from project leads, and to meet milestones and achieve deliverables.
- Excellent writing and communication skills, including the ability to write text that can be published
- Willingness to work and learn within an interdisciplinary team

Desirable selection criteria

- Master's degree with an empirical research component
- Experience of contributing to research publications
- Knowledge of literature at the intersection of mental health and climate change, and/or environmental ethics

Knowledge of developing digital tools for empirical research
