The role

The Quantitative Research Assistant will work as part of the Young Lives research team to support agreed research priorities. The post holder will be expected to work collaboratively with researchers and policy staff in Oxford and the four Young Lives study countries.

The position of Quantitative Research Assistant emphasises analysis of quantitative data and requires strong quantitative analysis skills and interpersonal/team-working skills. The post-holder will be responsible to the Young Lives Quantitative Research Officer.

At ODID we embrace and cherish our differences, and endeavour to be considerate and welcoming of all. You are most welcome at ODID, without the need to hide any part of who you are. We acknowledge societal inequalities and how these affect us, and those around us, personally and professionally. We hold an Athena Swan bronze award in recognition of our efforts to introduce organisational and cultural changes which promote equality, cherish diversity and create a better working environment for all. We are also taking active steps to promote race equality and reduce the risk of bias and discrimination. We work together to enrich, fortify and grow our community and dedicate our combined efforts to teaching and research to increase our impact and influence in development debates at the national and global level. We encourage all eligible candidates to apply for our vacancies and join us in pursuing our goals.

Responsibilities

The post holder will undertake the following duties:

- Prepare Young Lives survey data for analysis and archiving including producing composite variables and linking data across rounds;
- Prepare Young lives fieldwork documents (e.g. fieldwork manual, consent form and training materials) and research materials for publication;
- Analyse survey data using appropriate statistical models and techniques; linking and merging data from external sources with Young Lives data where appropriate;
- Support the data manager on data matching exercises;
- Prepare reports from analyses, including preparing tables, graphs etc. that can be used to best represent the findings in Young Lives written outputs and presentations;
- Contribute to research publications, book chapters and reviews;
- Contribute ideas for new and existing components of the Young Lives study;
- Provide technical support to researchers and policy staff on their use of the Young Lives survey data;
- Contribute to discussions and share research findings with colleagues in Oxford and partner institutions in the Young Lives study countries;
- Represent Young Lives at external meetings/seminars;
- Contribute to wider project planning, including ideas for new research papers and sub-studies.

The Research Assistant will manage their own research and administrative activities, within guidelines provided by senior colleagues.

Selection criteria

Essential selection criteria

- A Master's degree completed by October 2024 in a quantitative social science discipline (e.g. economics, social statistics);

- Prior relevant experience of data analysis using household datasets (either through studies or work);
- Proficiency in using the STATA statistical package for data management, manipulation and analysis;
- Excellent analytical and statistical skills and experience, to include knowledge of advanced statistical modelling techniques and/or econometric techniques;
- High level written communication skills in English;
- Excellent interpersonal and verbal communication skills, including experience of communicating complex information to expert and lay audiences;
- Good personal organisational skills and experience, including managing a varied workload and working to tight deadlines;
- Flexibility and adaptability to work on a variety of tasks according to Young Lives' priorities, rather than the individual's own research priorities;
- An interest in issues of poverty and international development and a willingness to undertake overseas travel.

Desirable selection criteria

- Experience of survey design;
- Experience on conducting data matching;
- Experience of analysing household data sets from developing countries, including longitudinal data;
- Previous working experience as research assistant
- Experience of conducting independent research work
- Experience of data visualisation using Tableau
- Experience of using econometric modelling;
- Experience of preparing literature reviews, writing reports and contributing to research publications;
- Experience of working in a multidisciplinary, multi-national research team and contributing ideas for new research projects.

Pre-employment screening

Standard checks

If you are offered the post, the offer will be subject to standard pre-employment checks. You will be asked to provide: proof of your right-to-work in the UK; proof of your identity; and (if we haven't done so already) we will contact the referees you have nominated. You will also be asked to complete a health declaration so that you can tell us about any health conditions or disabilities for which you may need us to make appropriate adjustments.

Please read the candidate notes on the University's pre-employment screening procedures at: <https://www.jobs.ox.ac.uk/pre-employment-checks>

Hazard-specific / Safety-critical duties

This job may include hazards or safety-critical activities. If you are offered the post, you will be asked to complete a health questionnaire which will be assessed by our Occupational Health Service (OHS), and the offer of employment will be subject to a successful outcome of this assessment.

About the University of Oxford

Welcome to the University of Oxford. We aim to lead the world in research and education for the benefit of society both in the UK and globally. Oxford's researchers engage with academic, commercial, and cultural partners across the world to stimulate high-quality research and enable innovation through a broad range of social, policy and economic impacts.

We believe our strengths lie both in empowering individuals and teams to address fundamental questions of global significance, while providing all our staff with a welcoming and inclusive workplace that enables everyone to develop and do their best work. Recognising that diversity is our strength, vital for innovation and creativity, we aspire to build a truly diverse community which values and respects every individual's unique contribution.

While we have long traditions of scholarship, we are also forward-looking, creative and cutting-edge. Oxford is one of Europe's most entrepreneurial universities and we rank first in the UK for university spin-outs, and in recent years we have spun out 15-20 new companies every year. We are also recognised as leaders in support for social enterprise.

Join us and you will find a unique, democratic and international community, a great range of staff benefits and access to a vibrant array of cultural activities in the beautiful city of Oxford. For more information, please visit www.ox.ac.uk/about/organisation.

Young Lives

Young Lives is a unique longitudinal study of poverty and inequality, led by the University of Oxford, delivering research-to-policy impact in Ethiopia, India (Andhra Pradesh and Telangana), Peru and Vietnam since 2001. The study has been following 12,000 children, growing up in poverty from infancy into adulthood, across two age cohorts: in each country, the older cohort (OC) of about 1,000 children, born in 1994-5, have been tracked since age 8, while the younger cohort (YC) of about 2,000 children, born in 2001-2, have been tracked since age 1.

With over two decades of research, Young Lives has generated unmatched insights into the consequences of growing up in poverty and experiencing intersecting inequalities on young people, from early childhood through adolescence and into adulthood. Our recent research also examines the compounding impacts of global crises, such as the COVID-19 pandemic, climate change and conflict. Our holistic approach allows us to investigate the interconnected aspects of young people's lives, including their health and well-being, education, employment and family lives.

Young Lives is a collaborative partnership between the University of Oxford and research and government institutes in our four study countries. The study has been core funded by the UK's Foreign, Commonwealth & Development Office (FCDO, formally DFID) since 2001, with additional support from a broad range of funders including UNICEF, Irish Aid, the Netherlands Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the International Development Research Centre (IDRC), the Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC), the Children's Investment Fund Foundation (CIFF), the Hewlett Foundation, the Packard Foundation, the OAK Foundation, the National Institute of Health (NIH), the Medical Research Council (MRC), the Wellcome Trust and the Old Dart Foundation (among others).

Further information, including publications and impact case studies, can be found on the Young Lives website: www.younglives.org.uk

Oxford Department of International Development

The Oxford Department of International Development (ODID) is the focus in the University for post-graduate teaching and advanced research on developing countries and emerging economies, and on their relationship with the rest of the world. ODID is located at Queen Elizabeth House in central Oxford, and is thus often known as "QEH". The Department is recognized as one of the leading international centres in its field. It was ranked as the top development studies department in the country in the UK government's national assessment of research excellence in both 2008 (Research Assessment Exercise) and 2014 (Research Excellence Framework), with most of its research rated as world-leading and internationally excellent. ODID maintains a world-wide network of scholars and policy researchers in developing countries. The Department has particular strength in the study of Africa, Asia and Latin America. It has close relationships with cognate departments in Oxford, such as Politics and International Relations, Anthropology, Area Studies, Economics and Law.

The Department comprises a core of some 25 academic staff engaged in teaching and research, together with 71 research staff in five research centres - the Refugee Studies Centre, the Young Lives Study, the Oxford Poverty and Human Development Initiative, the Technology and Management Centre for Development and the International Growth Centre, which is led by ODID and the Department of Economics, with the LSE. These centres have support from key research partner institutions in developing countries, and engage in extensive policy advisory work for governments, international agencies and civil society organisations.

ODID teaches around 260 postgraduate students on doctoral and Masters' programmes. Students come with outstanding academic track records from all over the world. Degrees offered at ODID include the DPhil in International Development, a DPhil in Migration Studies (based at Anthropology), a two-year MPhil in Development Studies and four one-year MSc courses on Economics for Development, Refugee & Forced Migration Studies, Global Governance & Diplomacy, and Migration Studies. These programmes are research-led, and combine rigorous research methods training with applied thesis work which prepares students for both academic and policy careers. The Department is also home to a considerable number of post-doctoral fellows and academic visitors from a wide range of developing countries.

Further information about the Department can be found at <https://www.qeh.ox.ac.uk/> and on the courses at <https://www.qeh.ox.ac.uk/content/study>.

Social Sciences Division

The University's academic departments and faculties are organised into four large groups, known as Academic Divisions (Social Sciences, Mathematical, Physical and Life Sciences (MPLS), Medical Sciences, and Humanities). The divisions are responsible for academic strategy and operational planning, oversight of the teaching and research of their constituent departments and faculties, and for personnel and resource management. The social sciences at Oxford are distinctive for both their depth and breadth, with over 1,000 academic and research staff working across fifteen departments, faculties and schools. The Head of the Social Sciences Division is Professor Timothy Power.

The Division is a world-leading centre of research and education in the social sciences. The Times Higher Education (THE) University Rankings placed the University of Oxford as number one in the world for Social Sciences in 2018 and 2019. REF 2014 confirmed Oxford as the UK powerhouse for research in the social sciences, accounting for more 4* research than any other institution. Our academic and research staff and students are international thought leaders, generating new evidence, insights and policy tools with which to address some of the major global challenges facing humanity, such as sustainable resource management, poverty and forced migration, effective governance and justice. As well as active interdisciplinary links with researchers in other divisions at Oxford, we engage and collaborate extensively with other universities and a wide range of governmental and non-governmental practitioner communities such as law, business, public health and welfare, international development and education around the world. The Division has an extensive portfolio of external funders, partners and supporters, with competitively-awarded external research income exceeding £50 million per year and philanthropic income over £25 million a year. As part of our commitment to equality of opportunity, seven of our departments have achieved Bronze Athena SWAN Awards: the Blavatnik School of Government, Economics, Education, International Development, Law, Anthropology and Museum Ethnography and the Saïd Business School. The School of Geography and the Environment now holds an Athena SWAN Silver Award. All our other departments are either in the process of applying or scheduled to do so shortly.

The Division delivers an exceptional range of high-quality educational programmes all underpinned by the innovative research being undertaken by our academics. The student body is made up of over 2,000 undergraduate students, nearly 3,000 students studying postgraduate taught programmes and 1,200 postgraduate research students. The programmes we offer are wide-ranging, often interdisciplinary and include professionally-oriented provision in areas such as business, law and education. The Division is home to several of Oxford's most widely recognised teaching programmes, such as Philosophy, Politics and Economics (PPE) at undergraduate level; and at the Masters level programmes such as the Bachelor in Civil Law (BCL), Environmental Change and Management, International Relations, and Social Data Science.
